

MISSING

Dakota "Dack" Peck was in big trouble.

Dack had some strange dreams. The dreams made no sense. They led him to Mrs. Miller's house. Mrs. Miller was his math teacher last year.

Dack broke into the Millers' house. He had to find answers. The dreams were too real. Tim Ward was his friend. He had been missing for a while. Tim visited Dack in his dreams.

Dack knew Tim took drugs. Tim was in trouble. Dack just knew it.

"I know some stuff," Tim said. "It will blow this town up. I'm going to the press, man."

That was the last day Dack saw Tim. Then Tim went missing. His new car was found. He was not in it. The police could not find him.

Mrs. Miller's husband was a local cop.
"He's on that case," she had said.

Dack stood in the Millers' home. His dreams had brought him here. He was looking for clues. Something. Anything.

But what? He kept thinking of his dreams.
The number 1-1-5-5. Water. Mrs. Miller's house. Were these clues?

Then he heard a sound. Voices?

The front door!

Someone was coming.
