

Veronica Roth

Veronica Roth grew up in Barrington, Illinois with her mom and three older siblings. She is a self-proclaimed nerd who credits her mom with giving her a love of reading from a young age. Roth particularly enjoyed Lois Lowry's books and The Giver became her favorite. Soon after she read Scott Orsen Card's Ender's Game and K. A. Applegate's Animorphs series, she decided to become a young adult writer. She started writing fiction in grade six and wrote her first novels in her twenties.

After graduating from Northwestern University with a degree in creative writing, Roth rose to popularity quickly when the three books in her dystopian trilogy were published in three years. Many of her themes arise from her Christian faith and if given a faction choice, Roth says she would choose to be Abnegation. Her blog shares more about her beliefs; however, due to her struggle with anxiety she turns off comments. As an adult she is not afraid to admit that she sought help to deal with her mental health.

Fans were so anxious to read Allegiant that it became Harper Collin's most preordered book. Later her books in the Divergent trilogy became blockbuster movies that further popularized the books.

Readers who wish to know more about Four's point of view can read about it in Roth's companion volume, Four: the Divergent Collection. This prequel tells Four's story of his initiation and transition to Dauntless and his hope that Tris will help him be himself.

Now married and living in Edgewood, Roth will release Carve the Mark, the first book in her new science fiction duology. It is set in space and is the story of Akos who must work alongside his enemy in order to rescue his kidnapped brother. Once again she draws her inspiration from books that she has previously read.
