Companies get many resumes
when hiring.

Yours must stand out.

Write a good one.

Check it over.

If it looks good, you do too.

Most people use black text.

But they may add a bit of color.

Make a resume easy to read.

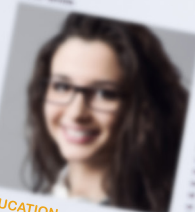

Bold key words.

This will make them stand out.

NOT HER JOB

PJ GRAY

Liz was ready for summer break. There were just a few weeks left of her junior year. Next year, she would be a senior. She couldn't wait.

She walked out of history class. There was a crowd of students in the hall. They were reading a sign on the wall.

"What's going on?" Liz asked.

"Didn't you hear?" a girl replied. "Lola's is hiring for the summer!"

"Really?" Liz asked. "They've never done that."

“I know,” the girl replied. “They are looking for two students. This is so cool!”

Liz agreed with her.

“Are you going to apply?” the girl asked.

Liz smiled. “Of course.”

“Me too,” the girl replied. “I bet everyone will. It’s going to be competitive.”

Lola's was a local clothing company. The owner had grown up in town. She opened the store after finishing college.

Lola designed the clothes herself. Most of the girls at school shopped there.

Liz wanted to work at Lola's. She loved clothes. She carefully chose her outfit every day. She pored over fashion magazines.

That afternoon, Liz and Amber sat on the couch doing homework. Amber was Liz's best friend.

"Are you applying for the job?" Amber asked.

Amber already had a job. She worked at an art gallery. That was probably the second coolest job in town.

"I want to," Liz said. "There's no way they will hire me."

“Why not?”

“Everyone else will be applying. Why would they choose me? I have never had a job in fashion,” Liz said. “Last summer I worked at the water park. I wrapped gifts at the mall over the holidays.”

“That doesn’t matter,” Amber said.

“Easy for you to say,” Liz replied. “You already have a job. A great job.”
